AMATEUR RADIO ANTENNA STRUCTURES

POLICY GUIDELINES FOR THE DEVELOPMENT OF AMATEUR RADIO ANTENNA STRUCTURES IN RESIDENTIAL AREAS

INVESTIGATION:

Regulation of Amateur Radio Antenna Structures

Industry Canada is the legal authority under the federal Radio communication Act to regulate and approve amateur radio communications in Canada. This includes authorization for the location of radio communication facilities such as antenna towers. The full scope of Industry Canada's powers is laid out in Circular CPC-2-0-03, "Spectrum Management Client Procedures - Environmental Process, Radio Frequency Fields and Land Use Consultation".

The Circular classifies amateur radio services as "Type 2" stations which are exempt from the site-specific licensing requirements of commercial broadcasting and telecommunications stations (for example cellular telephone services). Type 2 stations must comply with Health and Welfare Canada's Safety Code 6 regarding safe levels of radio frequency fields. With respect to the City of Salmon Arm's involvement in the approval process, Type 2 station applications must comply with Industry Canada's requirements for consultation with the local land use authority.

Under the heading "Land Use Authority", the Circular states:

Industry Canada does not require, nor does it have the power to require, the participation of this process by any land-use authority. The procedure does not have the effect of conferring any federal power on a land-use authority. Nor does it confer any right of veto. In the event that a proposal is opposed, the land-use authority may provide Industry Canada with a statement should it wish to do so. There is no specified form for statements of either concurrence or opposition.

The "Land Use Consultation" section of the Circular provides the basis for the City to establish the formal community consultation process requested in NM98-10, and reads as follows:

Prior to the installation of an antenna structure for which it is felt that community concerns could be raised, owners of Type 2 stations must consult with their land-use authority. There is no specific procedure for this consultation, nor is there any requirement to receive the prior approval from Industry Canada to construct the antenna or its supporting structure. Where the land-use authority concurs with the proposal, installation of the structure may proceed. Should the owner of the Type 2 station believe that the proposed structure or change proposed thereto is insignificant, and decide to proceed with the installation without consulting with the land-use authority, it must be with the acceptance of any consequences of this decision.

Where the owner of a Type 2 station has consulted with the land-use authority but has not received a response, the owner may decide to either:

- continue to pursue a decision from the land-use authority, or
- proceed with the installation of the structure and accept any consequences of this decision.

Industry Canada expects Type 2 radio station owners to address the concerns of the community in a responsible manner, and to consider seriously all requests put forward by the land-use authority. Where Industry Canada believes that the installation of an antenna structure is not appropriate within its surroundings, it may request submissions explaining why the structure should not be altered or removed.

Although the City may participate in the review of amateur radio antenna structure developments, only the Federal Government can regulate and approve such structures. This precludes establishing municipal regulation through the Land Use Bylaw.

Despite its authority to regulate the development of antenna tower structures, Industry Canada has no involvement with the application of private restrictive covenants (RC's) that prohibit the erection of amateur radio antenna structures in residential areas. Industry Canada's position is that an applicant is required to check out whether RC's are in force in a particular area, and should avoid proposing installations in such areas.

Proposed Municipal Development Policy Guidelines

Industry Canada and Radio Amateurs of Canada representatives support the introduction of a City policy for the development of amateur radio antenna structures in residential areas and an appropriate community consultation process. To this end, the City has set out its position with respect to the placement of new amateur radio antenna structures in residential areas through the proposed policy guidelines contained in this report. The proposed guidelines are described below:

a) Development Requirements

The proposed policy provides a listing of the City's requirements concerning the physical design and location of antenna tower structures. The policy would apply to all residential areas, but the majority of concerns occur in lower density residential land use districts.

The proposed policy guidelines allow, subject to a total height limit of 13 metres (42.64 feet), for antenna support structures to be erected in residential areas without the need for a public consultation process, provided placement and design conditions are met to the satisfaction of the City Administration. In this case, a letter of support will be forwarded to Industry Canada stating that a public consultation process is not required. The 13 metre height limit may allow acceptable signal reception and transmission within the amateur radio spectrum, reducing ground level electromagnetic interference, and be aesthetically compatible with the urban design and character of lower density residential land use districts. The proposed policy does not support the erection of any antenna tower structure exceeding 21 metres (68.89 feet) in total height.

It is the responsibility of the owner to ensure installation and maintenance of the antenna structure in accordance with sound engineering practices.

Council and / or the Building Inspector may request design requirements relating to the placement on site, appearance, landscape screening, and verification of structural design and support of antenna structures.

In determining the proposed height standards, it was recognized that the maximum building height in lower density residential land use districts is 10 metres (32.8 feet) and that the height difference between this and the 13 metre tower height is less than 10 feet (9.84 feet).

An 18 metre height limit has been applied in other urban areas in Alberta, including the City of Edmonton and the County of Strathcona, and has been accepted by stakeholder groups in these municipalities. This has been increased to 21 metres (68.89 feet) for practical considerations.

b) Public Consultation Process

Antenna structures in residential areas that exceed the 13 metre total height are subject to a formal public consultation process that is undertaken by the applicant:

- In that circumstance, the amateur radio operator will be expected to notify owners of properties within 100 metres (328 feet) of the boundaries of the site for the proposed antenna. Notification to property owners, Ham or amateur radio operators, the Municipal Councilors, the federal Member of Parliament and the City of Salmon Arm Development Services Department will be by formal letter.
- The applicant will also be required to provide all persons notified with information on the proposed antenna structure including its type, total height, design and location.
- Following receipt of a letter of notification from the applicant, any party claiming to be affected may send their comments to the City of Salmon Arm Development Services Department within 30 days.

- The applicant or any notified party may convene a public meeting to discuss any matter contained in the letter of notification within 21 days of such notification by the applicant. Following the meeting, the Administration would be provided with a written record of the proceedings.
- The Administration will provide a letter to Industry Canada and the applicant within 45 days of receipt of the letter of notification to indicate its position on the proposed antenna structure and to confirm, when appropriate, that the consultation process was undertaken in accordance with the policy guidelines. The letter will also be copied to the City Councilors, the federal Member of Parliament and the Ham or radio operators association.
